Cared By a Steer.

William Laidlaw, living a mile west of Melvin, sold three steers to drovers last week and on Saturday started with his boys to drive the cattle to Yale for shipping. When near Melvin one of the animals refused to go further and turned back. Ed. Laidlaw gave chase and after running one of the animals nearly two miles succeeded in heading it off. The steer had run up the R. R. track and on being headed off refused to turn back and immediately pitched battle and making straight for its pursuer struck him in the breast felling him to the ground and at once began to gore him with its sharp horns until he lay prostrated and helpless between the rails on the track. Mr. Paisley's section gang, noticing the animal on the track, started back with the hand car, when the infuriated animal made straight for them. The men reversed their car and were obliged to pump for all that was in them for half a mile to keep out of the animal's way. The steer finally tired and stepped off the track. Mr. Paisley securing a rope came up on the opposite side of the fence, when the steer came up against the fence to attack him, climbing up over one of the fence posts he threw a lasso over the animal's horns and tied him fast to the post. Some neighbors had meantime seen Mr. Laidlaw fall and going to him later found him in an almost unconscious condition and bleeding at the mouth and ears, one horn of the animal having penetrated the ear. He was carried home and there properly cared for. At last reports the injured man is considerable better and it is thought he will fully recover. After the steer had been left tied for half an hour the section crew went back to see how their victim was prospering, when to their surprise they found the brute stretched at full length, dead and stiff. The day was exceedingly hot and it is thought the animal had become over-heated and went entirely mad.—Brown City Banner.
